Let's say that we take a number \sqrt{a} (a positive integer) and we square it. If we get back another number, $\sqrt{a^2}$, we call \sqrt{a} a square number. Another way of putting it is: for a given number a , if \sqrt{a} is a square number, then a is a square as well. For example, $\sqrt{6}$ is a square of 2 (the reciprocal of 6), so 6 is a square as well. In general, is there a known general technique to determine if a given number is a square (i.e. how to determine if \sqrt{a} is a square number for a given a)? I was thinking about using the phi function, but I am not sure how to set up a proof using that. The case I gave above would work if we decided to use the \sqrt{a} - 595f342e71
