In this chapter, you learn to use Photoshop's extensive features that enable easy and even complicated image retouching. You learn what layers are and how they function, how to work with layers, and how to edit them. This chapter also talks about the ability to easily edit color, manipulate images, and crop or resize them for print or the Web. Developing a plan for retouching images Before you start the image retouching process, you need to decide on a direction for your project and the tools to use. You may want to edit an image that's already been printed and altered in a certain way, or you may want to make a new image with your retouching goals in mind. When retouching, you face the possibility that you may be inadvertently tampering with an original image. If you aren't sure how to proceed, refer to the instructions that accompany the image that you're retouching. If you need to create an image from scratch, don't worry; the next few sections show you how to develop a plan for image retouching. Working with an image as a blank canvas Instead of adding color and text to an image, you can create an image that you can retouch easily and efficiently. You don't have to waste time or money creating a new image from scratch when you have the original image already. By using this strategy, you can save time and money and get the job done in one fell swoop. In this section, you discover how to download images from your computer, open them in Photoshop, and begin manipulating them into perfect editions. To keep from accidentally touching the original image, you should lock your original file — or use a copy of it — so that you're working on a blank document. Downloading images To have Photoshop help you in your editing efforts, you need to download images from the Web and then open them in Photoshop. To ensure that your online data is safe, you can upload it to a secured computer with a program such as ` (pronounced `s-cure-et`). Be sure to create a new Web browser session in which you're logged into the secure connection with an account that you control. The browser should be connected to a secure location such as a bank website, and you should place all images in secure folders. The following sections describe how to download an image and open it in Photoshop.

I have the current date of January 31 and I want to subtract the days until the new year starts on February 3rd. However, when I try this, I get 31, which is the date at the start of the year. moment().subtract('days',31); A: You are using the helper method days() which is the number of days between the start of the given time and the start of the current time. Reference: For example: // January 31st 2016 const now = moment(); const yesterday = now.subtract(1, 'days'); // yesterday is January 30th Phillip

Q: Functionality loss during jsonlinting I'm going to write a parser for a JSON file and it is validating a json file. My problem is that it is validating perfectly fine on jsonlint.com and it is not validating with my parser. Is it normal to have some functionality loss from validating with a parser or am I doing something wrong? A: You are doing something wrong by asking for a parser to validate a document which it has neither knowledge of nor where it can look up information about. You are asking about parsing a document written in JavaScript and you are seeking a script in JavaScript to do this. Neither of these has a concept of a "document"; they are just strings. JSON is an artifact of web services and is commonly used to transfer data to and from web services. JSON documents are not documents, they are just objects in JSON syntax. It is an idea that JSON documents are translated to and from JavaScript data structures which represent the JSON document. The idea behind JSON is to have an object notation for transferring objects between systems. You simply try to determine whether an object is an instance of the JSON object representation of your document; you can also look up the value of a key or value and can modify a value and the associated object is still valid JSON. JSON is a protocol and not a specific document format. JSON documents can be in a variety of formats like HTML or XML. If you are using HTML, you can ask the browser to send JSON. How the browser will do this is vary with the browser. You can do it yourself, but it would have to be the same as the protocol that the browser used to generate the page. If the browser wants to generate a JSON document, it will do it that way even if you don't use JSON. Q: Storing 3 lists in a single char pointer I was just storing my files in the char pointers. Below is my code. char *strcat(char*s1, char*s2); char *strcat(char*s1, char*s2); char *strcat(char*s1, char*s2); char *fname; char *ext; fname=file_name; ext=file_ext; strcat(fname,ext); strcat(fname
