Handy to use in a class which can call and then just get the responses of that class in a loop in an instance. The where I can easily control the number of iterations. (I then use the idea to call a function from that class which returns a number. So the output is this: "There is class with one variable (function) 'count' to be able to call this from an external file and produce a unique number which is displayed on the screen. (I then use to be able to call the function (self::function) in that class from another script which again produces a unique number and displays on the screen. Is this possible? Where to my code do I include my class? Is it possible to define my class outside of a function and then still call its functions from another script? Should I use a while other language to achieve this? The end result of my goal is this, while the time is always changing. (I like to be able to
