MDA paramedic Danny Naim said the victim is a 35-year-old man who arrived at the Jerusalem Post Tel Hashomer Hospital with knife wounds to his neck, torso and face. The victim was pronounced dead upon arrival at the hospital. A second stabbing victim, a 25-year-old man, was reportedly arrested at the scene. Police were searching for the suspect, who fled the scene. A: node.BackgroundColor = Color.Red; the above code works. A: Since the documentation for TreeView's NodeBackColor property says if the node is locked, this property is ignored. it is not possible to change the background color of a node in a treeview if you lock the node. A: If you are using design view: right-click on node, select Open Properties and change the background color there: The R-Thy1.2: EGFP mouse provides a powerful model for examining antigen-specific T cells in vivo. The conventional model of antigen-specific T-cell activation is the response to a specific peptide-MHC complex displayed on the surface of an antigen-presenting cell. These peptide-MHC complexes are a limited repertoire that can be examined in vitro using in vitro peptide/MHC-binding assays. In contrast, naturally occurring T-cell immune responses are polyclonal. They recognize specific antigenic epitopes that interact with specific regions of the T-cell receptor. As a consequence of this polyclonality, it is difficult to identify the epitope being recognized by T cells in vivo. Thus, it is particularly difficult to assess the specificity of T-cell responses in vivo. We have recently generated a transgenic mouse model expressing a T-cell receptor (TCR) that directs the expression of enhanced green fluorescent protein (EGFP) in CD4+ T cells. The resulting R-Thy1.2 mouse exhibits green fluorescence when the T cells are activated by specific antigen. 6d1f23a050
