Remove annoying log off or shutdown messages Hide icons in notification area Removes icons from taskbar Expose Windows Shutdown icon using media controls Set timer to log off Simple and easy to use Do you ever sit and stare at your computer's monitor for an eternity, just because it takes so long to shut it down? That's where this program comes in handy. It allows you to specify the amount of time that your PC will remain on after you are done with it. Don't like the Windows shutdown process? This program allows you to get rid of it. Ninja Log Out! will show the buttons and animation that are normally present, to tell your users that they will be shortly logged out. But you won't have to go through the hassle of going into Control Panel and uninstall the program, since this is one of its features. Time is defined using hours, minutes, and seconds, with an option to set a custom value. If you want to do something with that timer, you can either set it to reboot or power off your computer. The icons are placed at the right side of the taskbar. Simply move them around by using a few keyboard shortcuts. Once you have finished configuring the settings, close the program by pressing the X to shut it down. After configuring the settings, it's possible to use the media buttons to restart your PC. The process is identical to the shutdown action, but it will use the music that is saved on your hard drive instead of the Windows system sounds. The last and most important piece of the puzzle is exposing the shutdown button using a keyboard shortcut. Press [Win] + [D] together to do just that. Ninja Log Out! Rating: To the right of a pager in the Outlook 2010 inbox, you can add a message that lists each message. With this trick you can display the inbox of Outlook 2010 in one column or two columns, putting more emphasis on the email that is viewed in the first column. As we saw in the How To display the inbox messages list in a single column on the Outlook 2010 right-click menu, however, now you can also achieve the same effect by right-clicking on a message in the inbox. To do this right-click on any message and select Add to the Message List The type of list that you add a message to is determined by which menu you open. In order to add

You might not always be around to perform some basic operations such as to shut down your computer, thus leaving it to use power for no reason. This can lead to accidental loss of data in the case of laptops. To prevent this, Ninja Log Out! Allows you to set a timer for a couple of computer power options. Lightweight and easy to use It only takes a little while to get the application installed on your computer so you can take it for a spin. Before this is possible, it's best to make sure that .NET Framework is installed on your computer. Chances are it's already there because it comes as a default feature in modern Windows iterations. The visual design is similar to the style of Windows gadgets, at least for the set of options, close, move, and size controls. On the other hand, functions are wrapped around a custom interface, with a neat overall layout. Just so you don't keep too much empty space, there's the possibility to have the cock displayed. Set time and choose action In order to activate one of the available functions you need to set a timer, with dedicated value fields for hours, minutes, and seconds. However, it can't minimize to the tray area until the action is triggered, but it does go to the taskbar to take up less visual space. The name might be a little misleading, mostly because logging off is not one of the supported operations. Instead, you can either reboot or power off the computer after the specified amount of time. Additionally, you can force all applications to close when this is done, but be sure to have your data saved or backed up. On an ending note In conclusion, Ninja Log Out! can assure you that your PC properly shuts down after a specific amount of time. It's easy to configure and use, but it could have used more power options than just to reboot or shut down the computer. Related Posts of "Ninja Log Out!" 16 Comments As far as I can tell, it doesn't shut down the computer. It just logs the user out. It's still running. When the computer is locked, the programs is running. When you lock the computer, it shuts down all running programs. Some programs that cannot be shut down may stay running and remain, like network services. When this happens, it'
