The pore size of catalytic precious metal layers deposited by magnetron sputtering onto internal surfaces of different micropores in carbon-supported Au-Pd composite catalysts was measured by aberration-corrected scanning transmission electron microscopy (AC-STEM) images. Unwanted amorphous carbon is present in the catalyst body as a result of substrate preparation, thus the AC-STEM images show solely the crystalline Au-Pd structure. AC-STEM images at the surface of the catalyst body reveal that the porous layer is thicker than previously reported. The thickness of the porous layer as determined by different methods is in good agreement with that determined from TEM of thin cross-sections.Q: How can I overload a function based on a variable type? In php, is it possible to change the type of an overloaded function based on a variable type? For example: $x; function handleInt($x) { // do something else } $handleInt = handleInt; $handleString; How can I make them act the same, without duplicating the code? A: As indicated in this answer, you can create two functions that call each other. For instance, function function1($x) { function function2($x) { // do something else } $handleInt = function1; $handleString = function1; $handleString($x); } function function2($x) { // do something else } $handleString($x); } function function2($x); } function function2
