It. Manipulation of the environment by suicide bombers. The functions of suicide bombers are well defined. What remains unclear is why these functions are fulfilled. One explanation for this situation is that suicide bombers are manipulated into the role by coercion or false beliefs. The present study was undertaken to try to discern if suicide bombers in Israel appear to fit a manipulative description in terms of their motivation, beliefs and intentions. A controlled, qualitative study was carried out to identify the difference between organized cultic groups (demanding leadership and submission) and suicide bombers (aggressive, isolated, ambivalent). Contrary to the traditional view, suicide bombers appear manipulative in that they do not appear to be the 'true believers' of a larger cause. They are not alone but identified to the point of comparison; they have made their own choices; they are isolated and ambivalent and their beliefs about suicide bombing appear to be inconsistent. They appear to be manipulated, not into the role but into one of the roles of the cult. of the homeless themselves. Our experiences while working on the text led us to develop a larger framework – a coherent way to understand and document the experience of homelessness – one with which we now expect any homeless person to engage when working with us as researchers. However, we are currently unable to apply these findings beyond the experiences of research participants in the contexts of their own lives. Future research will involve further exploration of homeless people's experiences of being homeless in the contexts of routine living. This will enable us to extend our work and identify the points at which people find it difficult to access their belongings and therefore we must work with them as individuals. Ethical approval Newton Hall Hospital Trust granted ethical approval on 18 September 2016 and subsequent review on 31 July 2016. Registered at the University of Manchester, the project was adopted by the homeless service, St James's House, and so named at the time of recruitment. Data protection All data is anonymised and identifiable information destroyed at the end of the project. No additional interviews were undertaken after the final interview was carried out. Consent for publication Not applicable.

TorrShrinkage-induced stress relaxation of a solution in a capillary tube. The relaxation process of a Newtonian fluid in a narrow tube under mechanical tension is studied numerically. The force balance between elastic stress and total pressure as well as the boundary condition at the tube wall are solved, and the distribution of relative velocity between the fluid and tube wall is determined. The shift in the distribution of relative velocity is used for comparison to experimental results obtained with a Faxitron model. The numerical results show clearly that the relative velocity shifts from the direction of elastic force to that of total pressure.

Furthermore, the relative velocity is lower than that predicted by classical models.1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a secondary battery including a positive electrode plate with a positive electrode active material layer and a negative electrode plate with a negative electrode active material layer, the active material layers being sandwiched by separator sheets. The invention also relates to a method for producing such a secondary battery. 2.

Description of Related Art Hitherto, lithium ion secondary batteries have been known as secondary batteries, in which lithium-containing transition metal oxide is used as the positive electrode active material and graphite is used as the negative electrode active material, by which power can be output. The lithium ion secondary battery is desired to be reduced in size, and so downsizing lithium ion secondary batteries has been considered. In a lithium ion secondary battery, an electrolyte solution containing a lithium salt dissolved therein is injected into a case, which, usually, consists of a flexible resin-made material, and lithium ions positive electrode plate and the negative

Erk signaling with hypoxia and the anticancer effect of cisplatin in OVCA cells. The Akt and Erk signaling pathways are involved in the regulation of cancer cell survival and are also modulated by the hypoxia-inducible factors (HIF). The anticancer activity of cisplatin in cancer cells may occur as a result of its ability to damage the tumor cells directly or indirectly by activating signaling pathways. We investigated the Akt and Erk signaling pathways in ovarian cancer cells to determine the regulation of these pathways and the mechanism by which cisplatin regulates the activation of these pathways. Cells were treated with cisplatin in the absence or presence of the Akt inhibitor, Akt1/2 or Akt3 selective inhibitor, MK-2206, or the Erk inhibitor, U0126, and the levels of the phosphorylated proteins were determined. Oxidative stress was induced using hypoxia or hydrogen peroxide. Cell death in the presence of hypoxia or hydrogen peroxide was assessed by flow cytometry and crystal violet assay. Cisplatin induced a dose-dependent increase in the phosphorylation of both Akt and Erk. Both the Akt inhibitor and Erk inhibitor abolished the activation of Erk, Akt, and HIF-1 α . The addition of Akt1/2 or Akt3 selective inhibitors blocked the activation of Akt,
