Clinical features of posterior uveitis in non-HIV patients. The clinical features of posterior uveitis and the pattern of serology in 286 non-HIV patients with posterior uveitis are reported. Aetiology was presumed to be immune-mediated inflammation in 130 (44%) cases. Anterior uveitis associated with posterior uveitis was found in 203 (70%) cases. Of the anterior uveitis cases, 35% were due to toxoplasma, 20% to cytomegalovirus, 19% to syphilis, and 14% to other disease. In posterior uveitis, all cases of macular oedema and 9% of cases of cystoid macular oedema were due to cytomegalovirus. Parenchymal vasculitis was seen in 82 cases (29%). IgG serology was performed on 197 of these cases. Indirect immunofluorescence using cryostat sections of thymus as antigen was used in 10 cases and it showed positive titres in seven cases (70%). Once upon a time, there was a young woman called Betty who actually married her childhood sweetheart and later became a famous architect and commentator for the BBC. She then gave birth to a daughter and became single again. Betty wasn't sure if her daughter - Ruthie - was a lesbian, transgender or was gender fluid, so she looked it up on the internet. She found out the answers might be in San Francisco. What she didn't realise was that the wrong website would be the first port of call. She ended up trawling the UK for a week to find her answers, and was shocked to find out that in the UK, transgender people are widely discriminated

The vet says to "take the plug out, apply a little Vaseline, then pull the plug out and quickly remove it". I've tried this several times and whenever I do it, I have a shock. I know I've just done it about half an hour ago, and I'm off to a rip roaring pitch, and get a massive shock. But I've had many events in the past, and never had this happen before. Thanks for any help. I usually "wiggled" the shocker off, but only a couple of times. I don't have any experience using a Vaseline to soothe the shocker, but I have used it for other things, including sticking to my nails, so I guess it is alright. As for the wiggling, if the shocker is still on and you wiggle it off, you get a shock because you have not started receiving the signal yet. I've never had this happen to me, but I'm going to go out on a limb and say that you probably know it's time to remove the shocker much sooner than half an hour has passed. In other words, your puppy isn't very good at receiving the signal in the first place. I have had the same thing happen with my English springer. I waited
