The histochemical localization of sulfated glycosaminoglycan (GAG)-degrading enzymes in the dental pulp was investigated in order to elucidate the role of enzymes in the degradation of these compounds. Human cadaver specimens, including unerupted deciduous teeth and third molar, were fixed with Bouin's fixative and examined under light microscopy. The following sulfated GAG-degrading enzymes were detected: arylsulfatase A, arylsulfatase B, arylsulfatase H, and galactose 6-sulfate sulfohydrolase. All enzyme activities were observed in the odontoblast layer and in predentinal areas. The enzymes were present in granules in the odontoblastic processes, and the odontoblast cell bodies were free of enzyme activity. The enzymes were also present in the odontoblastic layer and in predentinal areas of epithelial cells. These results suggest that the enzymes may take part in the degradation of sulfated GAGs in human dental pulp.Type II collagen consists of three polypeptide chains, the alpha 1(II), alpha 2(II) and alpha 3(II) chains. The genes for the three chains have been cloned and characterized at the nucleotide sequence level. As with other collagen types, the triple helical structure of type II collagen is essential for the biological activity 6d1f23a050
