Northeast of Willow Tree Swamp and to the southeast of Moonstone Plains is a massive mountain in the middle of the region called The Sacred Stone. This mountain is the home of one of the NPC clans in the area. It is the largest NPC clan in the game. If you're willing to endure the the difficult trek up the mountain, you may have a chance to meet the founder of this clan. Tetons, a friendly tribe, are found living near The Sacred Stone. Their tribe and flock consists of about 250-400 people. Tetons also keep a couple of aurochs horses on the mountain. The aurochs are indigenous to the Tetons' homeland, which is in the North Central region of Montana. Tetons, while much like tribes found in America, are very similar to those found in the Southern Highlands of Scotland. Most of the people of this tribe can be found wearing the kilts, which are much like the ones found in Scotland. They also wear furry hats. The footwear is also similar. As far as the language, it is also pretty much the same. For a major portion of the year, the tribe does not speak with outsiders. They can be found on top of The Sacred Stone, dancing, eating, and fishing. It is said that the aurochs are sacred to this tribe. The Mountain Mystic, another NPC clan, is found on The Sacred Stone. These people worship demons and spirits. The symbols and markings on their faces and bodies are constantly changing. Some are made of natural rock, while some are made of different materials like shell and bone. One of the most sacred items the Mountain Mystic have are the Teena weapons. The Teena weapons are made of bones and shells from a great unknown species of sea creature. When used, the Teena weapons can grant one of the following effects: Cows can feed and drink water where ever they go Ride for free Cows can eat any grass they want Ability to walk through walls Aurochs are sacred to this tribe The Mountain Mystic is a very interesting clan. They believe in the existence of different demons and spirits. Their most famous deity is called the Moonspirit. The Moonspirit is the one who brought them to The Sacred Stone. They believe the death blasted at them. The light of the torches was cut through with the ghostly, rippling mist that obscured their senses. “My Lord,” the drow guard hissed, “though the Fog Pirates send hundreds of the wild beasts here, we have slain at least one of them. There are other ones: the ghosts emanate malice from the face of this foul swamp.” “What is your name, Guardsman?” “Eminate, my Lord.” “Make certain that you are the only one to have ever come upon the Fog Pirates’ nest,” the slaver lord called to his guards. For answer, he and his captain of the guard pressed on, their cloaks of black wool whipping out in the gale, their gloved hands claspng a scimitar scabbard and one long-handled axe. Their blackcloaks were the only thing that could make out against the ghostly mists that swirled around them. “Greetings, Negarlith Helmsbane, Lady of Avant,” said the guard, his voice raspy with foulness. “Make certain that you hire only the best, for your coming is our first and only hope of victory.” “The swiftest of fliers, Negarlith, would not deliver the tripflats even if the staff had agreed to deliver them by foot,” she said, her voice raspy from the cold, and cold it was. The mouth of the Fog Pirates’ lair was a terrible place, full of the ghosts of those who had been cut down. The coldness rose up into her mouth, rising like the mist sweeping up through the eye slits of the skulls that hung from the rafters. A drow was but a wraith in a misty riptide. “YOUR HOPES COME AT A DIFFICULT TIME,” Negarlith replied. “I come here as a thief. I do not know of your army and your people. I trust only in my own weapons.” “You speak glibly, to the point of blasphemy,” said the guard, a pureblood drow in the coat of black faced with red highlights. He removed his helm of iron that was studded with fake
