In addition, these degenerative changes were confirmed to occur in certain individuals who were asymptomatic. However, the degenerative changes did not progress in the presence of symptoms or signs. The relative risk of developing symptoms or signs in the presence of a new degenerative change was approximately 1.3 times greater than that of a person without a new degenerative change. In addition, the risks of developing symptoms or signs, and signs only, were approximately 1.4 and 1.4 times greater in people with a new degenerative change in the lower cervical spine than in those without a new degenerative change.
