WeChat, the Chinese messaging app, launched its own crypto wallet — dubbed Weixin Wallet, or Wechat Wallet — in September last year. The app is gaining popularity across Africa, and it now holds more than a million users. Wechat Wallet is the first crypto wallet run by a China-based company in Africa. It's the closest thing to a one-stop-shop for crypto in Africa. Since the app's launch, more than 30,000 merchants, including Uber and Airbnb, have started accepting WeChat Pay. The app is now coming to Africa through an introduction by Africa's leading mobile messaging app, Naspers. "We are delighted to have WeChat Wallet Africa included in the local Naspers offering," said the group's MD Andrew Pole, adding that: "The launch marks a significant milestone in the Naspers group's strategy of building an ecosystem of content distribution platforms for social commerce to enable the creation of new businesses and entry into new markets." Wechat Wallet's launch in Africa follows the launch of crypto wallet Libra in the South American continent. Libra is Facebook's own digital coin and it's on its way to becoming the next Facebook. Despite the ban on cryptocurrency in Africa, Libra is gaining traction. Late last year, eight of the world's largest banks — including BBVA, Santander, and Natixis — partnered with Facebook to launch the digital currency. If the Libra

Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method for the conversion of ethylene to a mixture of ethane and ethylene using a bromine containing catalyst. More specifically, the invention is related to the conversion of ethylene to a mixture of ethane and ethylene in the presence of a bromine containing catalyst. 2. Description of the Prior Art Conversion of ethylene to a mixture of ethane and ethylene containing a higher olefin, e.g., propylene, butylene or isobutylene, has been accomplished by contacting the ethylene with an alkyl bromide in the presence of a chromium-containing catalyst in a liquid phase process. In the process, the alkyl bromide serves as a co-catalyst, in addition to a source of molecular weight control for the catalyst, and the higher olefin formed is removed from the reaction zone by stripping and is recovered. However, commercially this process has several disadvantages; for example, the ethane produced by such a method is of low purity; for example, the purity is in the range of 50% to 60%, and there is no provision for recycle of the ethane through the process. Further, the selectivity for ethane is generally in the range of 75% to 80%, even when the alkyl bromide has a large bromination tendency.Q: Model building with Python and scikit-learn not picking up correct value from training set I am trying to model train with Python and scikit-learn. The problem is that my model is not picking up the correct value from my training set, although it contains the correct answer. I have two test sets, one is from a GPU connected scientific calculator, which is a CPU only (no Nvidia or AMD) solution, and the other one is from a Linux device, a Raspberry Pi. The model trains for an appropriate amount of time and produces some results, which are not correct. With example below: `import pandas as pd import numpy as np from sklearn.model_selection import train_test_split from sklearn.neural_network import MLPClassifier # Generate some dummy test data df = pd.DataFrame({"Features": [100, 90, 50, 6d1f23a050`
