Today, Microsoft released a major update for the Windows 10 operating system, version 1803. Among the most important changes that are included in this release are a new browser, a new theme, a new start menu layout, the addition of a new secure lock screen, improvements to the Photos app, a new Task View, the addition of an iPad-style multitasking mode, and more.

The new Microsoft Edge Browser While Internet Explorer continues to be the default web browser for Windows 10, the new Microsoft Edge is Microsoft's answer to Google Chrome and Mozilla Firefox. Edge is not only a completely new browser, but it also features a new rendering engine.
The old engine, Trident, is still used for Internet Explorer 11 and other legacy products, but the new Edge uses the Chromium rendering engine. Edge was designed to follow Chromium's standards, and so far the developers have been successful in that regard. This is demonstrated by the fact that it is the first Microsoft browser to pass the Acid 3 test, which measures compatibility with W3C's web standards. Moreover, Edge has been designed to handle PDFs in a more efficient manner, and it offers better accessibility for visually impaired users. Edge also works as a standalone application and as an extension for Microsoft Internet Explorer. The New Theme Windows 10 has always been known for its customizable look and feel, and with Windows 1803, this emphasis on personalization has been elevated even higher. With the new theme, you can choose to have a dark or light version of Windows 10, or even select a blue, green, orange, or purple color scheme. By default, the new theme is a dark version of Windows 10, but there are plenty of options for making Windows 10 lighter or darker. The new theme is available as part of the Windows Insider program or as a standalone package. The New Start Menu Layout Windows 10 has used a modified version of the classic Windows 7 layout since its release, but Microsoft is now providing users with the ability to change the layout to one that looks more like Windows 10 for a more modern look.

The Start Menu is now divided into two parts. The left part of the menu displays the traditional Windows 7-style icons, while the right side is the new touch-friendly one. The New Lock Screen The new lock screen now includes the ability to unlock your PC. Before this, users had to use either the password or a PIN to unlock the PC. The new lock screen
