mouths of chickens and fish. The study, published earlier this year in Proceedings of the Royal Society B, found that more than 13 million pounds of consumer plastics ended up in the landfills, estuaries and oceans of Minnesota from 1990 to 2010. That's about four pounds for every man, woman and child in the state, or more than 30 times the amount the state collectively recycles. And nearly all of it came from discarded takeout meals. Researchers say the high numbers are likely due to the long-lasting properties of plastics, which can take hundreds of years to decompose. "There's nothing as insidious as being sent back to the landfill," says lead author Tiffany Larsen, a Ph.D. student at the University of Minnesota. "The plastic gets eaten, and we are a big consumer of meat." Larsen and her colleagues looked at plastic waste numbers after taking a closer look at composting, another commonly-accepted approach to recycling. Composting is used as an alternative to landfills, rather than as a replacement for recycling, and is based on the decomposition of organic materials to return them to the soil. Unfortunately, recycling alone has proven insufficient to eliminate waste. The study's results indicated that consumers are putting a lot of plastic in the garbage. Only about one-third of plastic waste generated in Minnesota was recycled, and the remainder was consumed in other ways, like food. A large portion of the plastics are small bits of plastic used to wrap foods, and it's easy to see where they came from — the packaging of fast foods like pizza, french fries and burgers. But researchers found the most common type of plastic waste is larger pieces of plastic that consumers don't mind discarding, like those that are found in takeout meals, including yogurt, shrimp and broccoli containers, and frozen food packaging. Even the most diligent consumer can easily overlook such products, Larsen says.
