Is there a faster way to read a text file in ruby? The loop takes less than 2 seconds to read a 15MB file. My question is, is there a faster way of doing this? File.open(filename, 'r') do |file| file.each_line do |line| if line[0] == "address:" if line[-1] == ";" address = line[1..-1] end elsif line[0] == "subject:" subject = line[1..-1] end end end A: You can't beat the iterator, but you can use the readpartial method of the String class: require 'benchmark' Benchmark.bm(7) do |x| x.report("[1,1]") { while(line =

file.readpartial(15_000_000)) } x.report("[1,1]") do while (line = file.readpartial(15_000_000)) if line.size > 0 && line[-1] == ';' @address = line[1..- b7e8fdf5c8

Enables you to open and view XPS files. Operating system: Windows Vista, Windows XP, Windows 2003 Key features: Ease of use; Zoom in/out; Find XPS file & open; Paste into PDF; Full screen view; Ebook Reader in one; Notes: In order to view XPS files on your computer, you will need the software XPS Viewer by Ersatz Software which is a FREE version of the XPS Viewer EP; The latest release is 0.8.1 and you can download it directly from their website.In the first ever 5G demonstration in France, Huawei showcased an experimental 5G capable prototype, and what we saw can only be described as groundbreaking. The pilot program saw a network of over 1.5 million transceivers (tens of millions if you consider the average population of the country), working as a system of remote sensing and processing intelligence to gather data throughout a country. The gathering of information was seamless from the moment you turned on your phone until the time it was disabled and doing nothing. Huawei showcased the experiment with the company's new Kirin 980 chipset, and my first thought after seeing the unit was that it would easily be able to help prevent crimes against citizens across the nation. The constant data collection and processing were synchronous in real-time, something that has yet to be seen on a widespread basis. The Kirin 980 is capable of processing data on its own, with the assumption that it is data that the system can handle, and so the sample we saw was running a real-time data monitoring system. According to Huawei, this future-ready hardware would even be capable of communicating with the driverless cars that will be a part of the 5G network, helping to maximize the safety of both. This also included the first-ever 5G wireless modem, in which the 5G wavelengths could be used to communicate between devices. It was once again running on the Kirin 980 chip, although we did not witness the internal antenna on the device. However, when it comes to 5G applications, the antenna isn't nearly as important as the efficiency of the gear in general. Aside from being highly efficient, this particular 5G Wi-Fi module is also backwards compatible, meaning that devices already on the 5G network will still be able to communicate with it. Again
