I don't think it's possible to prove that the "old" American workforce is really the smallest in the world, but I believe that's the case and I'll put forth the reasons why. There are two sub-sections, one for manufacturing and one for services, and I think it's best to tackle the manufacturing side first. The workforce declined by 8.8 million in the decade from 1990 to 2000, the period of the fastest-growing economy in America's history. A half-million workers left manufacturing during that time, about the same number that left early in the 2000s. The manufacturing job losses since 1990 haven't been as extreme as the decline in the early 2000s, but they have been staggering. In that 10-year period, roughly 1.2 million U.S. manufacturing jobs were lost. The cut-off for measurement of "new" jobs may not be as high as it once was - research has shown that the "new" jobs created in the 1990s far outnumbered the "lost" jobs in manufacturing - but the loss of those 8.8 million jobs was significant. The last year-over-year percentage increase in manufacturing jobs was in 1999, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Since then, the number of manufacturing jobs has declined by about 1.2 million, and it's expected to drop another 500,000 in the next three years. Today

Hmmmm, i had thought of that too for some reason, but yes, doesn't change the idea that what was actually done in the film was far more ridiculous, and disgusting. Also, to my non-British ears, they did the same thing with Dredd. Instead of a clenched and bulging fist, they used his signature 'Dredd grill' and made it into a 'Dredd beehive'. Thing is, while I'd prefer to see him run on all fours, I want to see him move. How he looks while moving is not a big concern for me, you only get one chance to play this icon for maximum of points. Dredd is long dead and gone, he no longer exists to be what he once was. It is what it is, what do you want it to be? As for, and on a general level, which do you prefer to see: Legion-y or campy in varying degrees, but in a consistent and reliable style. e79caf774b

To study serological and virological markers associated with severe dengue, paired acute and convalescent sera from 105 hospitalized patients in Bangkok were analyzed. There was no evidence of secondary dengue in any patients, but 9 (8.6%) had primary dengue with vascular leakage that required fluid resuscitation and/or blood transfusion. IgM- or IgG-class antibodies were detected in 93 (89.5%) and 66 (62.9%) of 105 patients respectively, and there was a correlation between the degrees of the two antibodies. More severe disease was associated with a higher incidence of IgG-class antibody. A decrease in the number of platelets during the fever period was associated with a higher incidence of IgG-class antibody. There was a significantly greater decrease in platelet counts in the severe than in the mild group, which suggests that platelet consumption is the mechanism for the IgG-class antibody development in severe cases. A 4-fold or greater increase in levels of viral antigen-specific IgM antibodies was detected in nine (8.6%) of 105 patients with primary dengue. A 4-fold or greater rise in the level of viral antigen-specific IgG antibodies was detected in 22 (21%) of 105 patients. The IgG antibodies induced in primary dengue infection showed heterogeneous patterns of binding to viral antigens in Western-blot assay; they reacted with envelope glycoprotein antigen in 22 (21%), pre-membrane or envelope protein 1 in 17 (16%), and nonstructural protein 1 in 31 (29%) patients
