Flatulence Definition Flatulence is the gas, usually unpleasant odor, that leaves your body when gas is trapped inside your digestive tract. Alternative Names Farting Fart Vomiting gas Causes Flatulence (emitting gas, also called "farting") usually happens when food leaves the stomach, but it can happen anywhere in the digestive tract. Most gas is formed as part of the bacterial breakdown of food in the stomach. Although uncommon, there are rare cases of bacterial infections that form gas in the gut. Gas can become trapped in the intestine and cause flatulence. Over time, the bacteria in the gut can build up, causing gas to gather together and be pushed upwards into the large intestine. It can take as little as 2 to 3 days for the bacteria to produce large amounts of gas. If you have this problem, talk to your doctor. Symptoms Flatulence (farting) occurs when gas moves from the stomach to the lower part of the digestive tract. It can often be smelled if you stand close to the person emitting it. As the gas moves down the digestive tract
