Q: Java database output with Oracle 11g I am relatively new to using Oracle DBs. I have managed to do some very simple things with Oracle and Java, such as defining a table, creating a table and inserting some rows into it. I am now trying to retrieve a table with a query. I have a simple class that has a number of string properties. I would like to query a table in the database, store the returned values in a list and print the output to the console. I am confused as to how to do this. A simple Google search indicates that there should be some sort of connection string in the database. For instance, you would connect to a MSSQL database with the following: `Connection con = DriverManager.getConnection("jdbc:jtds:sqlserver://myserver;user=myusername;password=mypassword;database=mydatabasename");` How do you connect to an Oracle database, and what would the equivalent code be? Thank you. A: You can connect to Oracle databases using the following library: You can see an example of how to use the connection in the `Main.java` file. You can also refer to the Oracle java driver documentation (which is a good read): Conventional snowboards employ a binding on the forward part of the snowboard to secure a rider's boot to the board. The binding may be a traditional "toe-side" binding, which fastens the front of the boot to the board and the boot heels to the board, or a "heel-side" binding, which fastens the back of the boot to the board and the front of the boot to the board. In both bindings, the boot heels are fastened to the board in a particular orientation to ensure that the boot is parallel with the snowboard to facilitate balance when riding. Conventional boots do not provide sufficient lateral stability on a snowboard to prevent side to side movement of the boot, and thus allow the toe to rock or shift laterally. Both traditional toe-side bindings and heel-side bindings suffer from similar problems. In both bindings, the sole of the boot has insufficient lateral stiffness
