1. Features in Photoshop Elements 1.1. Adjustment Layers Using the Adjustment Layers feature you can apply changes to multiple layers at once. You can also edit the settings of layers. Adjustment layers are useful for bulk image adjustments, for example, changing the brightness and contrast of the entire image at once. Adjustment layers can be added as a layer group. Click on the Layers palette to add an Adjustment Layer. Click the plus sign (+) to add a new Adjustment Layer, or select Edit > Layers > New Adjustment Layer from the menu. Adjustment Layers are stackable. By default, the adjustment layer is added after the last layer. This means that the adjustments you make do not affect the layers below. To change the order of layers that are applied to an Adjustment Layer, click and drag the Adjustment Layer to the new position. A dialog box will appear with the name of the adjustment layer. By default, the layers are named New Adjustment Layer 1, New Adjustment Layer 2, New Adjustment Layer 3, and so on. 1.2. Smart Objects Smart Objects are special layers that can be scaled, rotated, and translated. Once you have made changes to a Smart Object you can continue editing it to further improve your images. Use Edit > Copy Merged to copy the cropped section of the image. Click on the Layers palette to create a Smart Object from the current selection. You can copy, cut, or delete Smart Objects with Edit > Copy Merged, Edit > Copy, or Edit > Delete. A dialog box will appear with the name of the Smart Object. You can change the size of the Smart Object with Edit > Transform > Scale and Rotate. You can edit the position of the Smart Object with Edit > Transform > Move. 1.3. Rotate Canvas and Guides When you create a new document in Photoshop Elements, the canvas is automatically set to a portrait orientation. To change the orientation to landscape or portrait, click on the View tab at the top of the screen. Select Aspect Fit from the drop-down list, the proportions will be adjusted accordingly. Left click anywhere on the canvas or the image appears to rotate. This is similar to the function of CTRL+left-click in Windows or the Command+05a79ccff

Pages Monday, November 26, 2013 Well... I hope you all had a Merry Christmas and a fantastic holiday. I know I did, because I have not been to the computer for four whole days! This is a good thing because... well, here is why: I am going to be a DJ at Elks Lodge on Christmas Day!!! I hope you can imagine my excitement. This event is always a lot of fun for me. The people are really nice and very appreciative. I get all kinds of neat Christmas items to play to them. I also play some "new" songs for them. They have a big party every year, and I love playing at the Elks party! After the Elks festivities, I'm going home to take the dogs for a walk in the cemetery. I have two of my best friends buried there (Cynthia and Anthony). I'm going to meet them at 7:00. And, I know I probably shouldn't even be mentioning this, but after we leave the cemetery, I'm taking them out for hot chocolate and donuts. We really have to work up an appetite to do this! (Cute, isn't it? I forgot to get a picture of Anthony.) Then, at 10:00, I'm heading to Joe's Candies in Chesterfield, MO, where my Mom works. It's a nice little store. I love going there with her to pick out her Christmas gifts. She always gets a fun little something for me, and I get a fun little something from her. It's a nice little "vacation" for me. I don't know what I'm going to get for her this year, but I really want to get her a new cardigan! After that, I'm going to hang out in the food room for a few minutes, and then I'm taking them to my cousin's house for some family time. It will be the first time I get to see her children since their births. I hope they are not sick because I'll be sick as hell! Sometime during Christmas day, I'm going to go to see my sister. I'm

What's New in the?

Q: ReactJS: fetching an API for each component in a large list I have a large list of items that need data to update. fetching all the data takes too long because of the huge number of API calls. I was thinking of separating each part of the state array by fetching components/data and rendering them to a container div. The problem is, which is the best approach? A: Define a function that fetches data for each row. This will make the DOM manipulations (row rendering) faster. For example, you could do something like this: `defineUpdateRow (rowIdx, rowData) { return fetch(`${rowIdx}`) .then(resp => resp.json()) .then(data => ({...rowData, data })); }` In the DOM, you would use it like this: `render() { ... const updateBatch = this.state.list.map(rowData => this.defineUpdateRow(rowIdx, rowData)); // render the rows ... return( [updateBatch] ) }` Q: dynamically change the display of div using a variable containing url I'm trying to create a simple shopping cart (not php based). What i want to do is when any user click on a product displayed in a div, the following div have to fill up its content with the name of the product and its price. `{product[product]} {product[price]}` if ( `Si == 'product1'` ) { `Si = 'product2'`; } else if ( `Si == 'product2'` ) { `Si = 'product3'`; } Sorry for my english... Thank you A: You need to change dynamically, there are many different ways you could do this. Here is one of them: `$(body).append()`
