World Briefing | Americas: Uruguay: Gay marriage ban could stand Published October 31, 2012 12:01AM | Updated October 31, 2012 12:22PM BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — The government of Uruguay said on Tuesday that it would try to uphold a law banning gay marriage. The law, passed in 2006, makes gay marriage in Uruguay punishable by 10 to 30 years in prison. While Uruguay is one of only a few countries in the world to ban same-sex marriage, its government said that the law was intended to prevent civil unions from being used as a cover for other unions, such as polygamy. The Justice Ministry said the ruling was consistent with rulings by other South American countries that have also outlawed same-sex unions. The law says a married couple can only have children through the female partner. It also bars civil unions, defined by the government as unions that do not convey rights and obligations. Herman Charlton, a lawyer and lawmaker, said the government should allow for civil unions but drop the ban on gay marriage. “The right to life and to not have children through different sexual orientations is well established,” Mr. Charlton said. “This law is discriminatory, and we demand that it be repealed.” In July, Uruguay’s Supreme Court said that a case to ban gay marriage should go to trial. However, a lower court last year said the case against the law could be dropped. Last week, the government said that it would appeal the case to the Supreme Court. The United States and many other nations recognize gay marriage, but Uruguay was the only South American country to ban it. The Roman Catholic Church has traditionally opposed gay marriage, but in recent years has begun to acknowledge the equality of gays.
