The facts here are different from the facts in B. H. Bunn Lumber Co. v. Little, 284 Ill.App.3d 278, 219 Ill.Dec. 794, 672 N.E.2d 807 (1996) where the court considered whether a design presented to the United States Patent and Trademark Office had "incorporated" a design patent and was entitled to registration as a trademark pursuant to the Patent Act. There the court held that a design cannot incorporate a design patent because it is "an independently protectable design concept." Bunn, 219 Ill.Dec. 794, 672 N.E.2d at 810. The court concluded that because "the design patent and the trademark are designed as alternatives that may not be used together" the designs are not so integrated as to constitute a single design patent. Id. Here, Plaintiff's design is a separate and distinct product from its goods. Like the design patent, the toy itself may not be used together with the trademark. In fact, Plaintiff's design does not incorporate aspects of the design of its goods. Plaintiff's product is a game generally accepted as distinctive in the toy industry. This design is not derived from a patent or from some proprietary source. These attributes distinguish Plaintiff's product and establish that it does not suffer from common law trademark infringement. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion of Defendant in part and DENIES it in part. The trademark "Shrek" is valid and enforceable. However, the reverse side of the sticker with the "Warning: Never touch the Shrek sticker" is not a valid trademark. 3e33713323
