Q: Git: Removing any uncommited changes from being committed to a repository I have a new question about Git's (Git 2.0.0) behaviour, which I was able to solve the issue by just recreating the repository. However, I am wondering about a situation where I am on branch branch, which has uncommited changes (unstaged files). In some form, I would like to mark the branch I am on as "clean" and automatically remove all the uncommited changes. So my question is: how do I perform an action where only my current changes are kept in the history, and all previous changes that have been uncommited are deleted? A: git reset --hard will undo any changes on the working directory to current HEAD (including any changes that are still unstaged). Pre-Amway, PTL, DJ Mizzy, PTE Draftee & more. On May 8, 2006, Jean Pigozzi told an interviewer that in a matter of a few days after his election as pope, he would be appointing his own cabinet, that would include young Italians. Pigozzi was the candidate of the moderate wing of the Society of St. Pius X, a small but fiercely loyal group of conservatives that traces its origins to the mid-20th century, when the Society's founder, Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, broke ranks with the Vatican to create what he called a new Church. Lefebvre called his movement the "Old Catholic Church." Although a minority within Catholicism, Old Catholics have claimed adherents within the Roman hierarchy of the time and still do. The Vatican, in turn, has a long memory and does not take lightly to schisms in the Church. [pullquote] Some Old Catholic schisms have resolved, others have not. The Vatican still is keeping an eye on Lefebvre's remnant, which has been estimated at several thousand. As the Church awaits a decision on its canonical status, the problem for the pope-elect is that the Society continues to claim for itself a separate status within the broader Church. It views itself as the Church, and sees its own leaders as pope and bishops. It is a situation of great complexity, even for those who do not identify themselves as Old Catholics. By late 2006, the Society had set up five dioceses in Italy and France, where it acquired property and holds services. But it has its own bishops, who are not recognized by Rome. And it has its own priests, all ordained outside the Vatican-run Holy See's rite. On Saturday, the new pope will be inaugurated for his first papal Mass, which is one of two the Vatican will broadcast, and the second is by a video-conference link with an Old Catholic cathedral in Denmark. The church where

Pope Benedict XVI, on Wednesday, was born in Bavaria and at which he served as archbishop for eight years will not be allowing the new pope, Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio, to speak from its premises. So the papal Mass on Saturday will be held at a large "non-subscribing" church, which is, in effect, a Methodist church. Under German law, such congregations are not required to pay, and they do not receive the Mass
