Out of nowhere, a young girl has decided to become a superhero. She discovers that her friend's mother is also a superhero, and she will have to choose between them. Based on the first book by Catherynne M. Valente. Very enjoyable! I have seen a lot of dystopian, or post-apocalyptic stories lately, and have not been overly impressed (in fact, some of them were horrible, as in the rule of one guy being worse than a bad day at the office), but the world that Valente created is unique. I really liked the idea of having superhero's with families. There is a scene that involves a mother and daughter, with the daughter's power draining away, and explaining to her how her powers will work. While it was clear that the girl would lose her powers, it was great to see the mother's worry and anticipation about it. Also, I really liked the way that she took a proactive attitude. She was not interested in just hiding and hoping that the girl's powers would wear off. I felt that it was a much better plan. Also, since this is a continuation of Where The Stars Rise, I loved seeing how the characters were related. I have heard that there are going to be many more books based on this world, so I am going to be sure to check them out. I love Catherynne M. Valente's writing and definitely recommend her books. I enjoyed this enough to
