[Experimental study of the tolerance of the "Esmarch" bandage in mouse (author's transl)]. The "Esmarch" bandage was employed in the experimental treatment of deep skin wounds. The experimental design was performed according to the experimental model described by Grosser, who also suggested the number of trials. This article was realized as a teaching tool, in order to illustrate as to what extent the process of healing of the mouse wounds using the Esmarch bandage is affected by the number of treatments. The following results have been observed: In deep skin wounds of mice caused by cutting or friction, healing with one daily treatment of the Esmarch bandage is not totally accomplished before the 10th day. Healing with two daily treatments of the Esmarch bandage is totally completed in the 3rd or 4th treatment. In superficial wounds made by "Elasmotome" or "Wakasa" or by ligature and incision at the distal margin, healing with one daily treatment of the Esmarch bandage is not totally accomplished before the 10th day. Healing with two daily treatments of the Esmarch bandage is totally completed in the 3rd or 4th treatment.1.
