Early experiences with core biopsies of the kidney in children.

This study was conducted to assess the diagnostic accuracy of conventional renal biopsy compared to core biopsy in pediatric renal disease and to evaluate patient tolerance. Renal biopsies with core-needle and fine-needle aspiration biopsy (FNAB) were performed in 55 patients. Core biopsy technique was first used in 40 patients; the remaining 15 had been diagnosed by FNAB. Renal biopsy specimens were evaluated according to World Health Organization criteria (WHO). In 15 patients FNAB revealed neoplasia; renal biopsy confirmed neoplasia in three additional patients. Overall concordance of WHO grades was 98%. In 35 patients, renal biopsy suggested neoplasia. Conventional renal biopsy confirmed renal cell carcinoma (RCC) in 11 cases, while FNAB suggested RCC in only one. The only false-positive diagnoses were hemangioma in five patients, lymphoma in two, and focal glomerulosclerosis (FGS) in one. Sixteen patients had nonmalignant diseases (four with FGS, and two with FGS associated with minimal change disease); renal biopsy confirmed chronic glomerulonephritis in 15 cases. Complications occurred in 4/55 patients; in one the biopsy was incomplete. The diagnostic accuracy of core biopsy was equivalent to that of conventional renal biopsy. In this study core biopsy could be more easily performed with the same degree of patient tolerance. I was born a man. "I could never understand why no one had ever paid attention to me before. It was even more upsetting that many people's attention was painfully rapt. They saw me as the greatest hero in the world and the source of all light. They were totally indifferent and paid no mind to my existence. I hated them. "In my childishly confused mind, I believed all men were in some way like that until one day I discovered the ways of the girl. I learned how to hide my feelings and display a female face which commanded attention. I started to attract the attention of people who gave me what I needed the most and I thought I was truly happy. Yet, my small, yet acute awareness of my own true self would one day become unbearable." "You're a good man, eh?" "Yes." "So good that I've known you since childhood," she said. "Yes." "You've had this desire to see everything. Look at everything," she said. "You must have seen a vast amount." "Yes, I've seen a lot." "What's the most fascinating thing you've seen?" "You're not just a girl who likes sex. You're a girl with a question. You're really asking me something." ♦ 6d1f23a050
